The medical director is a physician with extensive training, knowledge and experience in the care of persons with coagulation disorders and treatment-related complications. This physician makes medical decisions for the care of patients seen and participates as an active member of the team.

CVCCD has a medical director for both the pediatric and adult populations served by the center. Both directors are a part of a larger group of physicians for the hematology and oncology services at Virginia Commonwealth University Health System. The medical director also serves as a consultant to other physicians and medical personnel on the treatment of persons with coagulation disorders at the VCU Health System and in the community.
