This person is trained to provide crisis intervention and routine services to patients and families on the psychological, social, and financial impact of having a bleeding or clotting disorder. This role communicates with consumer-related organizations and resources, which can assist the patient and family. This role also serves as one of advocacy in matters impacting persons with coagulation disorders.